

7. Cost

No further comments on this descriptor except to reiterate that cost considerations play into several of the other descriptors.

8. Motivational Issues Affecting Implementation

We suggest that consideration be given to examining what further motivational issues may impact whether the programs are implemented and sustained with fidelity. These include: appeal of materials and activities for the population to be served, appeal of materials and activities for the staff who will implement the programs, support of the program for the preexisting goals and programs of the site (e.g., school-based programs that support academics), how well the program otherwise integrates with existing goals, programs, and activities of the site (e.g., teachers are expected to direct student discussions, but not therapy), support offered for adapting the program to specific local populations, fit of materials to the typical structures of the setting (e.g., short enough lessons to fit within a class period, necessary equipment is usually available in the setting).
