

food processing and packaging techniques for enhancing safety may disqualify a product as "natural?"

2. What are the implications and conflicts that exist with regard to using current and new food processing methods, e.g., chlorine in poultry chillers; steam pasteurization of carcasses; high pressure processing; and modified atmosphere packaging and uses of certain classes of ingredients, e.g., antimicrobial agents, and the meaning of the claim "natural" on the labels of meat and poultry products?

3. Are there available data, in addition to the data provided in the petition, from consumer studies on views, perceptions, and beliefs about what the claim "natural" means on the labels of food products, including meat and poultry products? What do consumers think that the terms "minimal processing," "artificial and synthetic," and "preservatives" mean?

4. Do food safety and consumer protection benefits of using what historically may have been considered more than minimal processing techniques and antimicrobial agents outweigh conflicts with the meaning of "natural?" In recent years, FSIS has put a great deal of emphasis on improving food safety. In some ways, however, some definitions of "natural" might unnecessarily undercut this objective. For example, some definitions of "natural" could discourage the use of antimicrobials, which are used to reduce and prevent the growth of Listeria monocytogenes in foods. The Agency seeks comment on how it best determines an appropriate and rational balance between the need to ensure the safety of the food supply and the need to ensure that labels are truthful and not misleading.
