Material Characterization of Nanoscale Materials; Notice of Public Meeting

AGENCY: Environmental Protection Agency (EPA). ACTION: Notice.

SUMMARY: EPA is convening a public scientific peer consultation meeting on material characterization for nanoscale chemical substances ("nanoscale materials") to inform the development of its Nanoscale Materials Stewardship Program (NMSP) under the Toxic Substances Control Act (TSCA). The peer consultation on material characterization information for nanoscale materials is one of several actions EPA is taking to better understand the potential risks and benefits of nanotechnology. EPA is requesting comments at the public scientific peer consultation meeting regarding: Characteristics currently used or potentially available to characterize nanoscale materials; the rationale for the use of these characteristics; and issues to consider regarding use of these characteristics in the NMSP. These comments will inform EPA on material characteristics to be considered in the NMSP.

vii. Explain your views as clearly as possible, avoiding the use of profanity or personal threats.

viii. Make sure to submit your comments by the comment period deadline identified.

D. Where Can I Access More Information About Nanotechnology?

For more information about nanotechnology under TSCA, go to http://www.epa.gov/oppt/nano.

II. Background

There is a growing class of materials commonly referred to as engineered nanoscale materials. Materials having structures with the dimensions of roughly 1 to 100 nanometers, also known as nanoscale materials or nanoscale substances, may have organizations and properties different than the same chemical substances displayed at a larger scale. Nanoscale materials that meet the definition of "chemical substances" under TSCA are subject to TSCA. TSCA provides EPA with a strong framework for ensuring that new and existing chemical substances are manufactured and used in a manner that protects human health and the environment.

EPA is developing the NMSP for nanoscale materials to complement and support its new and existing chemicals programs under TSCA. The NMSP will also help to provide a firmer scientific foundation for regulatory decisions by encouraging the development of key scientific information and appropriate risk management practices. This peer consultation on material characterization is one of several actions EPA is taking to better understand the potential risks and benefits of nanotechnology.

On October 18, 2006, EPA invited the public, industry, environmental groups, other Federal agencies and other stakeholders to participate in the design, development, and implementation of the NMSP (see http://www.epa.gov/ oppt/nano). On July 12, 2007, EPA announced the availability of several documents for public review and comment related to the further development of the NMSP, including the announcement of a public meeting on August 2, 2007, to discuss and take comment on these documents (Ref. 4, see also http://www.epa.gov/oppt/nano/ nmspfr.htm).

EPA is holding this public scientific peer consultation meeting to assist in elaborating characteristics used to describe nanoscale materials for the purposes of the NMSP. The public meeting will involve peer panel discussions of EPA's discussion paper on possible material characteristics for the NMSP, with time allotted for public comment. EPA will place the discussion paper on possible material characteristics for nanoscale materials and the agenda for the meeting in the public docket, and on the OPPT nanotechnology website, Nanotechnology under the Toxic Substances Control Act, at http:// epa.gov/oppt/nano/index.htm.

For further information on input EPA has received or solicited regarding development of the stewardship program, see the Federal Register issues of May 10, 2005 (70 FR 24574–24576) (FRL–7700–7), October 4, 2006 (71 FR 58601–58603) (FRL–8070–3), and July 12, 2007 (72 FR 38083) (FRL–8139–2) and (72 FR 38079) (FRL–8140–2), as well as the National Pollution Prevention and Toxics Advisory Committee (NPPTAC) Overview Document (Ref.1).

III. Discussion Items for EPA and Stakeholder Consideration

EPA has identified the following discussion items on material characterization for nanoscale materials for which your consideration and comment are specifically requested: 1. Description of nanoscale materials

(e.g., types, categories).

2. Physical-chemical properties of potential interest (e.g., particle size/ shape/distribution/dimensions, agglomeration, aggregation, surface area, etc.).

3. Design to achieve unique properties (e.g., manufacturing, processing, chemical transformations).

4. Obtaining characterization data for nanoscale materials (e.g., analytical methods, models).

5. Metrology (e.g., methods validation, standards, and harmonization).

6. Prioritization of characterization data and data gaps.

In addition, EPA is requesting information on characterization or methodology currently used for nanoscale materials. The Agency is also seeking comment on characterization or methodology that could potentially be used for nanoscale materials in the basic or the in-depth phases of the NMSP that were described in the "Concept Paper for the Nanoscale Materials Program under TSCA," including the rationale for such use and any relevant issues (Ref. 4).

IV. How Can I Request to Participate in this Meeting?

You may register for the meeting electronically through EPA's website at http://www.epa.gov/oppt/nano on or before August 31, 2007. Advance requests will assist in planning adequate seating; however, members of the public may attend without prior registration.

You may submit a request to present oral comments in this meeting to the technical person listed under FOR FURTHER INFORMATION CONTACT. Do not submit any information in your request that is considered CBI. Requests to present oral comments, identified by docket ID number EPA-HQ-OPPT-2004-0122, must be received on or before August 31, 2007.
