BILLING CODE 4000-01-P

(A) Self-Regulatory Organization's Statement of the Purpose of, and Statutory Basis for, the Proposed Rule Change

The purpose of this rule change is to permit OCC to clear and settle range options proposed to be listed by CBOE.³ General characteristics of range options are described below, followed by an explanation of the specific rule changes being proposed to clear them.

Description of Range Options

Range options are European-style, cash-settled options that have a payout if the underlying interest value falls within a specific range of values (i.e., the "range length") at expiration. Range options may be listed on any index eligible for options trading on the listing exchange.

At the time a series of range options is opened for trading, the listing exchange will specify the range length. The exchange will also specify the "range interval," which is a value (e.g., 10 index points) used to divide the range length into three segments, the "low range," "middle range" and "high range." The low range starts from the lower value end of the range length and ends at the position on the range length where the value is one range interval higher. The high range is a segment of equal length located at the higher value end of the range length. The middle range is the segment of values between the low range and the high range.

Expiration months for range options would be equivalent to those for options on the same underlying index. The expiration date for a series of range options would be the same as for conventional index options. At expiration, range options would be in the money if the underlying interest value fell anywhere within the range length; otherwise the options would be out of the money.

Range options are similar in some respects to binary options.⁴ Unlike binary options, however, range options would be of a single type rather than consisting of a put class and a call class. Moreover, the payout structure of range options would not be "all or nothing" throughout the range length. Rather, the payout amount (i.e., the "exercise settlement amount") would vary depending on where the underlying
