Proposed Project

Exposure to Aerosolized Brevetoxins during Red Tide Events (OMB No. 0920-0494)—Revision—National Center for Environmental Health (NCEH), Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC.)

Background and Brief Description

Karenia brevis (formerly Gymnodinium breve) is the marine dinoflagellate responsible for extensive blooms (called Florida red tides) that forms in the Gulf of Mexico. K. brevis produces potent toxins, called brevetoxins, which have been responsible for killing millions of fish and other marine organisms. The biochemical activity of brevetoxins is not completely understood and there is still little information regarding human health effects from environmental exposures, such as inhaling brevetoxin that has been aerosolized and swept onto the coast by offshore winds. The National Center for Environmental Health (NCEH), Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) has recruited people who work along the coast of Florida and who are periodically occupationally exposed to aerosolized red tide toxins.

NCEH administered a baseline respiratory health survey and conducted pre- and post-shift pulmonary function tests (PFTs) during a time when there is no red tide reported near the area. When a red tide developed, NCEH administered a symptom survey and conducted PFTs. NCEH compared symptoms reported before the shift with symptoms reported after the shift. NCEH also examined changes in PFT test results (post-shift values compared to pre-shift values). NCEH did these comparisons during a time when there was no red tide and during a time when
