Background

The nonmedical use of prescription drugs is a growing problem in the United States, particularly among teenagers. According to the Department of Justice's 2009 National Prescription Drug Threat Assessment, unintentional overdose deaths involving prescription opioids increased 114 percent from 2001 to 2005, and the number of treatment admissions for prescription opioids increased 74 percent from 2002 to 2006. Teens abuse prescription drugs more than any illicit drug except marijuana—more than cocaine, heroin, and methamphetamine combined.¹ In 2009, 2.2 million (nearly one third (28.6%) of first time drug abusers) persons age 12 or older abused prescription drugs.²

DEA recognizes that abuse of prescription controlled substances is a significant issue in our nation's communities. When originally enacted in 1970, the Controlled Substances Act (CSA) and its implementing regulations did not contemplate a situation in which an ultimate user would deliver previously dispensed controlled substances to another person or entity. The CSA defines an ultimate user of a controlled substance as "a person who has lawfully obtained, and who possesses, a controlled substance for his own use or for the use of a member of his household or for an animal owned by him or a member of his household" (21 U.S.C. 802(27)). Under the CSA, "the term 'distribute' means to deliver (other than by administering or dispensing) a controlled substance or a listed chemical." (21 U.S.C. 802(11)). "The terms 'deliver' or 'delivery' mean the actual, constructive, or attempted transfer of a controlled substance or a listed chemical, whether or not there exists an agency relationship." (21 U.S.C. 802(8)).

On October 12, 2010, the Secure and Responsible Drug Disposal Act of 2010 (Pub. L. 111-273) was enacted. This act amended the Controlled Substances Act to allow ultimate users to dispose of unwanted controlled substances by delivering them to entities authorized by the Attorney General to accept them. This act also allows the Attorney General to authorize long term care facilities to dispose of their residents' controlled substances in certain instances. DEA is currently drafting regulations that would allow for the disposal of unwanted controlled substances by those not registered with DEA.

DEA has been charged by Congress with preventing diversion of controlled substances during the disposal process, and with considering the public health and safety as well as the ease and cost of program implementation and participation by various communities in drafting regulations to implement the law. DEA also recognizes concerns raised by State and local governments, the healthcare industry, the law enforcement community, public and private environmental organizations, and individual citizens. In response to these concerns, DEA is holding a public meeting to gather information from interested persons regarding potential solutions within the framework of the Controlled Substances Act.

As discussed above, DEA is seeking input in the form of oral presentations and written comments. Regardless of the format, specific concerns which persons are encouraged to address are as follows:

- The process of the disposal of unwanted controlled substances could create new and unwanted avenues for diversion. What is the safest manner, in your opinion, to dispose of unwanted controlled substances while preventing diversion?
- Please explain why you believe the solution you propose would protect the public health and safety and would curtail diversion.
- Do you foresee any specific obstacles to the disposal of controlled substances in your community or geographical area? If so, what are they?
- How is the disposal of controlled substances affected by State and local laws and regulations?

This meeting is open to the public.
