Additionally, the proposed rule change regarding opening constituent series with unexecuted sell market orders may also provide unexecuted sell market orders in low-value series with additional execution opportunities, which may be limited in such series. The Exchange believes the benefit of opening these series earlier to permit calculation of the exercise or settlement value, as applicable, of expiring VIX derivatives outweighs the minimal risk (if any) of executing sell market orders at anomalous execution prices following the opening rotation given the low-value of these series. By continuing to not open series with higher Composite Market offers if there would be unexecuted sell market orders, the Exchange believes the modified opening auction process will continue to protect these orders from executing at potentially erroneous prices following the opening rotation in series that are not truly low-value/no-bid. As noted above, the proposed rule change is consistent with current Exchange functionality regarding the handling of sell market orders in no-bid series.³⁶ Additionally, other options exchanges will open series if there are unexecuted sell market orders.³⁷
