History and Description of the Remains

In March of 1904, human remains representing, at minimum, one individual were removed from Holyoke Highlands in Hampden County, MA. The Holyoke Water Power Company uncovered the human remains while excavating a building site. A newspaper article in the Holyoke Telegram-Transcript of March 9, 1904 describes the circumstances of this discovery:

One of the most important archaeological discoveries in this Vicinity was made yesterday by workmen of the Holyoke Water Power Company who in making some excavations in this city, unearthed what is supposed to have been the remains of an Indian warrior, long since dead. Undoubtedly the body of the deceased Indian had lain in the ground for several hundred years as it was entirely decomposed; so that not even the bones remained intact with the exception of two small fragments, one of which is supposed to be part of a jaw-bone and the other is so small that its exact kind cannot be determined.

In the same place were found a necklace of copper and shell beads about a foot in length. The copper beads were one-fourth to a half inch in diameter and the copper used in the composition of the beads showed that they were made of sheet metal which had been rolled into shape. As the Indians did no smelting the copper must have come from the west where it is found in large quantities than in this part of the country. The shells used in the beads were oblong-shaped, about 1½ inches long and half an inch in width and were a sort of bone composition. The copper and shell beads alternated every fifth
