Synopsis

On March 26, 2021, the Bureau released a Public Notice seeking comment on specific measures mobile wireless service providers have taken in recent years to improve network resilience during natural disasters, in order to inform a report to Congress, as contemplated by the Explanatory Statement accompanying the Consolidated Appropriations Act of 2021. The Explanatory Statement accompanying the Act expressed "concern about the resiliency of wireless phone networks during natural disasters, including wildfires," and sought a report from the Commission "on the type of safety measures wireless carriers have for their customers."

The Bureau asks commenters to address how mobile wireless service providers have improved network reliability in the face of natural disasters. How have these efforts have improved the public's safety during natural disasters? Overall, what resiliency measures are most effective? How can these measures be improved? How have customers responded to new measures? The Bureau specifically seeks comment on steps wireless mobile providers have taken to ensure network resiliency, including but not limited to: Back up power in areas prone to planned power outages to mitigate wildfires; pre-storm staging processes; roaming agreements that can be activated quickly following a natural disaster; effective coordination with power companies, municipalities, and backhaul providers; diversification of backhaul options in disaster prone areas; availability of deployable network assets; network infrastructure sharing among operators during natural disasters; and communicating disaster-related information with customers, particularly members of vulnerable populations, including individuals who are low-income, members of the disabilities community, or non-English speaking. Are there successful network resiliency policy measures for fixed networks that have been applied to wireless networks, especially given that much of the backhaul for wireline providers is the same as wireless providers? The Bureau also seeks comment on cost and benefit issues associated with implementing measures to maintain and improve resiliency of mobile wireless networks. associated with maintaining and improving resiliency.

The Bureau intends to use these responses to update the Commission's existing record on wireless resiliency and help inform its report to Congress.

Federal Communications Commission.
