

information and approaches in a manner that is consistent with the requirements in TSCA for the best available science, and ensure decisions are based on the weight of scientific evidence. EPA needs to ensure that sufficient information is available to inform the risk evaluation, including the development of the scope of the evaluation. Information is needed in a timely manner. For example, the scope is generally published as a draft within three months of a chemical being designated as a high-priority substance, and the scope must be finalized no later than six months after the initiation of the risk evaluation process. Information is also needed to inform exposure and hazard assessments. EPA is considering requiring chemical manufacturers (including importers), processors, and distributors to submit information to EPA to support these risk evaluation activities.

Additional information about the risk evaluation process is available on EPA's website, at <https://www.epa.gov/assessing-and-managing-chemicals-under-tsca/risk-evaluations-existing-chemicals-under-tsca>.

Risk management: Following risk evaluation, TSCA mandates that EPA take action if the Agency determines that there are unreasonable risks to public health or the environment from chemicals currently on the market. If at the end of the risk evaluation process EPA determines that a chemical substance presents an unreasonable risk of injury to health or the environment, the Agency must immediately start the risk management rulemaking process to address the unreasonable risk. EPA needs to ensure that sufficient information is available to develop risk management plans and actions. For chemicals in the risk management stage, the Agency is considering requiring manufacturers (including importers), processors, and distributors to report the same type of information reported during the risk evaluation stage to ensure that EPA has the most up-to-date information to inform risk management actions. For example, if a company reported using a chemical in a particular manner at the beginning of the existing chemical process, but changes occurred in some way during the stages of the existing chemical process, the company would report on those data elements that have changed.

Additional information about the risk management process is available on EPA's website, at <https://www.epa.gov/assessing-and-managing-chemicals-under-tsca/risk-management-existing-chemicals-under-tsca>.

B. TSCA Data Reporting Authorities

Under TSCA section 8, EPA is authorized to collect certain information about chemical substances. EPA is considering using the authorities under TSCA sections 8(a), 8(c), and 8(d) to develop a model rule that can be used to trigger the need to report information for each stage of the existing chemicals program.

TSCA section 8(a)(1) authorizes the EPA Administrator to promulgate rules under which manufacturers and processors of chemical substances must maintain such records, and submit such information, as the EPA Administrator may reasonably require. The information includes, to the extent that it is known or reasonably ascertainable: Chemical identity and related information; manufacturing and importing exposure-related information including byproducts; processing and use exposure-related information; and existing environmental and health effects information. CDR, described previously, is an example of a TSCA section 8(a) rule.

TSCA section 8(c) requires manufacturers, processors, and distributors to maintain and, upon request, submit to EPA information such as: Significant adverse health effects, consumer allegations, occupational disease or injury, and complaints of injury to the environment.

TSCA section 8(d) requires manufacturers, processors, and distributors to submit to EPA study information that is known or reasonably ascertainable, including lists of health and safety studies and, upon request, copies of such studies. The studies do not need to be published to be included in the submission.
