

village as Potawatomi, in his May 31, 1812 letter to Ninian Edwards, John Hays claimed its population included Potawatomi, Chippewa, and Ottawa residents. Although the village has not been identified in the archeological record, it is reasonable to conclude the Aronin site represents a Potawatomi cemetery associated with Pepper's village at Aux Sable Creek.

In June or July 1969, human remains representing, at minimum, two individuals were removed from the Gougar site (11WI64), which is located on the south side of Hickory Creek in Will County, IL, east of Joliet, IL, in advance of road widening by the Illinois Department of Transportation. Salvage excavations were performed under the direction of Dr. Emily Blasingham of the Illinois State Museum. According to Blasingham's report, the area had been severely disturbed by previous digging, and only fragmentary remains of individuals and associated objects were recovered. In 1968, prior to the Illinois State Museum's salvage excavation, members of the Will County Historical Society removed six burials and associated funerary objects. In September of 1969, the Society reentered the six individuals, as well as two additional individuals, on property owned by the Joliet Park District, where they remain to this day. The materials collected by the Illinois State Museum salvage excavation were thought to be lost, until they were located at the Glenn A. Black Laboratory at Indiana University in 2009. In 2009, the collection was returned to the Illinois State Museum. It is unclear which objects can be associated with which individuals, but the objects listed in this notice are reasonably believed to be funerary objects. The human remains in the Illinois State Museum's collection have been identified as fragments belonging to the human remains that were reentered on Joliet Park District property.

The partial human remains were examined by an osteologist. Based on contextual information, they were identified as belonging to two individuals of Native American ancestry: One 20+ year old adult of unknown sex and one 0–3 year old infant of unknown sex. No known individuals were identified. The 17 associated funerary objects include one lot glass beads, two shell beads, one lot shells, one metal brooch fragment, one tinkling cone or ear bob, one lot metal/stone/fabric, two lots fabric/textiles, one bone or antler button, one lot knife fragments, one lot wood and sediment, one lot wood or bark, and four lots metal.

The artifacts are consistent with other late 18th–early 19th century Potawatomi sites in northern Illinois. Maps of ca. 1830 Native American villages in the region show a Potawatomi village referred to as “Hickory Creek Settlement” that may correspond with the Gougar location. Based on artifact types, historic documentation, and oral history, Gougar likely represents a Potawatomi habitation site and cemetery that predates 1830, at which time the property was settled by Euro-Americans.

Determinations Made by the Illinois State Museum

Officials of the Illinois State Museum have determined that:

- Pursuant to 25 U.S.C. 3001(9), the human remains described in this notice represent the physical remains of eleven individuals of Native American ancestry.
- Pursuant to 25 U.S.C. 3001(3)(A), the 92 objects described in this notice are reasonably believed to have been placed with or near individual human remains at the time of death or later as part of the death rite or ceremony.
- Pursuant to 25 U.S.C. 3001(2), there is a relationship of shared group identity that can be reasonably traced between the Native American human remains and associated funerary objects and The Tribes.

Additional Requestors and Disposition

Lineal descendants or representatives of any Indian Tribe or Native Hawaiian organization not identified in this notice that wish to request transfer of control of these human remains and associated funerary objects should submit a written request with information in support of the request to Dr. Brooke Morgan, Illinois State Museum Research & Collections Center, 1011 East Ash Street, Springfield, IL 62703, telephone (217) 785–8930, email brooke.morgan@illinois.gov, by January 18, 2022. After that date, if no additional requestors have come forward, transfer of control of the human remains and associated funerary objects to The Tribes may proceed.

The Illinois State Museum is responsible for notifying The Tribes that this notice has been published.
