Proposed Project

Homeless service providers knowledge, attitudes, and practices regarding body lice, fleas and associated diseases—New—National Center for Emerging and Zoonotic Infectious Diseases (NCEZID), Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC).

Background and Brief Description

Several bacterial vector-borne diseases that are spread by body lice and fleas disproportionately affect persons experiencing homelessness (PEH). Given the potential severity of louse- and flea-borne diseases, as well as their disproportionate impact on PEH, understanding the knowledge, and gaps in knowledge, of urban homeless service providers will allow for targeted education and interventions to reduce the risk of louse- and flea-borne disease among this population.

This information collection aims to improve CDC’s understanding of homeless service providers knowledge, attitudes, and practices regarding vector-borne diseases that can affect PEH. Insights gained from this information collection will be used to develop guidance for control of vector-borne diseases among PEH, and to improve educational outreach regarding these diseases.

Homeless service providers who work or volunteer in shelters serving PEH and
 on outreach teams serving unhoused persons living on the street or in encampments will serve as respondents for this study. Participating local or state public health partners will recruit up to 10 homeless service sites or outreach organizations. At each participating service site or outreach organization, 3– 5 participants will be recruited to participate, with a goal of 30–50 participants recruited by each local or state public health partner. A total of 240–500 participants will complete a survey instrument. In addition, one participant from each homeless service site or outreach organization will complete a separate site assessment form regarding policies and services to better understand structural barriers to vector-borne disease prevention, diagnosis, and treatment.

CDC requests OMB approval for an estimated 320 annual burden hours.
 There is no cost to respondents other than their time to participate.
