SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

Background

Individuals are inundated with information in their daily lives. The digital age has contributed to the increased production of information, and navigating our evolving information landscape is increasingly complex. Moreover, continuing changes in technology (e.g., social media, workplace technology, educational technology) make it important for everyone to understand how the availability, exchange, and presentation of information is evolving. Information literacy skills are thus critical for individuals of all ages. Information literacy skills refer to the skills associated with empowering individuals to locate, analyze, evaluate, and use information effectively (e.g., navigating information to learn a new trade or applying information to clarify decision options).

The Consolidated Appropriations Act of 2022¹ directed the Institute of Museum and Library Services to explore ways to improve information literacy within communities, including through the creation of a website to disseminate information literacy resources, toolkits, and best practices. The website is primarily intended to support activities within communities as they develop programs and other resources to support local interests and needs.

Information Requested

IMLS seeks to understand how organizations address and incorporate information literacy skills into local community programs broadly; how information literacy-related resources and programs are applied to specific areas of community concern, including but not limited to community health, safety, and economic well-being; as well as how these resources and programs are adapted and developed to address local demographics, unique community characteristics, and the continually evolving information environment. IMLS also seeks to identify information literacy-related resources and programs that could inform the development of a website to disseminate successful practices on information literacy programs and related tools.

IMLS invites input from stakeholders, experts, communities, and members of the public, including but not limited to libraries, archives, museums, researchers in academia, industry, government library and museum advocacy organizations, nongovernmental and professional organizations, and Federal agencies. A response to every topic or question is not required.

Key Topics and Questions

Topic 1: Information About Community Program Design and Development

A. How has your organization addressed information literacy in its programming, either directly or indirectly? What topics have you connected to information literacy? How have you talked about information literacy in your programming? What has worked best? What would you have liked to have been able to do but couldn't?

B. What kinds of resources and programming have attracted the most interest and engagement within your community, including but not limited to relating to community health, safety, and economic well-being? What resources and programming have generated the least interest and engagement? Please provide examples.

C. What methods do you use to conduct an assessment to understand your community's needs related to information literacy?

D. How do you design and adapt information literacy resources and programming to meet the needs and preferences of different demographic groups within your community (e.g., adult learners, people with limited English language skills, people with visual or auditory impairments, people with limited access to or skills with digital technology)?

E. Describe any toolkits or other readily available resources related to information literacy that you currently use or have used in your programming. Please indicate the source of these resources (e.g., government website, local health department, etc.).
