Title: Information Collection for Qualitative Research on Consumer Trust in Banking and Bank Supervision.

OMB Control No.: 1557-NEW.

Type of Review: Regular.

Affected Public: Consumers and financial service providers.

Estimated Number of Respondents: 230.

Estimated Average Time per

Response: 1.5 hours.

Estimated Total Annual Burden: 345 hours.

Description: The OCC plans to conduct a series of focus group/interview discussions to obtain an in-depth understanding of consumers' relationship with and attitudes toward banks, and other non-bank firms providing financial services or products (e.g., payday lenders, check cashers, fintechs providing retail banking services). The results from the focus group/interview discussions will: (i) inform the development of the survey instrument on consumer trust in banking and bank supervision and (ii) be used to produce a qualitative research report that shed insights into the meaning and role of consumer trust in banking and what factors and/or which banking products have the greatest impact on consumer trust in, and decisions on banking.

While the key elements of trust are established in academic research, it is unclear how trust should be measured from a consumer perspective. It is also unclear whether, and to what extent, trust impacts financial decision making. Trust in a specific bank, in banks generally, and in the banking system as a whole may be distinctively different, even if interrelated. Moreover, the components that influence and the meaning of trust in each of these may differ. Consumers may understand trust to mean that they expect an institution to treat them fairly, to help them during economic hardships, to protect their savings, or to function in a reliable and predictable manner (or any combination of these). Such perceptions may differ across individuals, across different financial services and products, and/or across different types of financial institutions. Moreover, perceptions may be based on personal experiences, media reports, personal expectations, or how well someone understands how the U.S. banking system works. Moreover, decisions to bank with a specific financial service provider may not necessarily reflect greater trust in that institution. Rather, it may reflect convenience or cost considerations that may be unrelated to trust. Conversely, lack of participation in the banking system may not necessarily reflect lower levels of trust in banks or the banking system. Rather, it may reflect cultural norms or a mismatch of supply and demand that may be unrelated to trust.

To ensure that the quantitative survey instrument accurately measures trust in banking and its role in banking choices, the OCC will recruit individuals from diverse socioeconomic backgrounds/conditions to participate in focus groups/interviews to help identify the specific types of financial services where trust is highly influential in a consumers' decision to bank, the sources of (dis)trust, reasons consumers may choose a particular financial institution, and whether they have different perceptions of trust across different types of financial institutions. Such discussions will help the OCC refine the quantitative survey to help ensure that the results reflect an accurate understanding of consumers' trust and its role in banking.

Additionally, the OCC may engage with industry stakeholders to understand the meaning and role of consumer trust in banking, as perceived by the industry stakeholders. From these industry stakeholder discussions, the OCC may gain additional insight in the approaches and lessons learned from the industry regarding the strategies to maintain or build consumer trust.

The discussion with stakeholders about their own experiences of establishing trust with consumers will enable us to identify any other additional perspectives and the reasons behind the level of consumer trust in banking.

Participation in this information collection will be voluntary and confidential and conducted in-person, by phone, or using other methods, such as virtual technology. The OCC estimates that the focus groups are expected to average 90 minutes with an estimated 345 annualized burden hours to 230 respondents (1.5 hours per participant, including intake form × 230 participants). Travel time, if any, is excluded from the estimated hours of burden. Comments submitted in response to this notice will be summarized and included in the request for OMB approval. All comments will become a matter of public record. Comments are invited on: (a) Whether the collection of information is necessary for the proper performance of the functions of the OCC, including whether the information has practical utility; (b) The accuracy of the OCC's estimate of the burden of the collection of information; (c) Ways to enhance the quality, utility, and clarity of the information to be collected; (d) Ways to minimize the burden of the collection on respondents, including through the use of automated collection techniques or other forms of information technology; and (e) Estimates of capital or start-up costs and costs of operation, maintenance, and purchase of services to provide information.

Theodore J. Dowd,

Deputy Chief Counsel, Office of the Comptroller of the Currency.
