SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

Title; Associated Form; and OMB Number: Exploring Patients' Experiences of Cross-Cultural Physicians Consultations; OMB Control Number 0720-PCFC.

Needs and Uses: Evidence shows that doctors bring their cultural values to the consultation as well as their professional medical culture. This can affect the way they provide Patient-Centered Care (PCC). PCC was devised to move away from the paternalistic biomedical model of medicine. However, consideration of the physician-as-person has been removed from the current conceptual framework of PCC and patients have not been consulted in its formulation. During investigation of complaint cases for the overseas US population, a trend was noted that seemed to suggest that difference in culture that impacted the patient experience. This was evident in complaint cases where care was provided exactly in line with current clinical guidelines, but the experience of care by the patient was poor.

Patient Reported Experience Measures have international recognition as a way of measuring quality of care but most are developed for a single healthcare system and not tested across different cultures. Evidence regarding cross-cultural experience from the patients' perspective is lacking but evidence from patients in ethno-cultural studies show that there are important cultural factors to consider in medical consultations. We will be exploring US patients experience of care abroad through interviews and focus groups to identify factors that can be used either to support training for physicians to enhance their cultural competency, or measurement of quality.
