

his failure to unequivocally accept responsibility for his actions. RD, at 19–21.

In addition to acceptance of responsibility, the Agency considers both specific and general deterrence when determining an appropriate sanction. Daniel A. Glick, D.D.S., 80 FR 74800, 74810 (2015). In this case, the Agency agrees with the Chief ALJ that Respondent's failure to fully acknowledge his wrongdoing suggests that these revocation proceedings have not sufficiently deterred him from future violations. RD, at 25–26. Although Respondent demonstrated some level of interest in complying with the applicable rules and regulations going forward, which suggests that the likelihood of recidivism may be reduced, on balance the considerations of specific deterrence do not support Respondent's application in this case. Id. Further, the Agency agrees with the Chief ALJ that the interests of general deterrence also support revocation. Id. at 26. A decision to grant Respondent's application now, despite Respondent's failure to fully accept responsibility for his misconduct, would send a message to the registrant community that lying to the Agency and prescribing controlled substances without conducting and documenting even the most basic examinations and mitigation measures can be overlooked or excused. Id.

Moreover, the Agency agrees with the Chief ALJ that Respondent's actions were egregious. Id. at 25. Respondent prescribed dangerous combinations of benzodiazepines and high-dose opioids while failing to conduct appropriate examinations, monitor for compliance, or maintain accurate medical records, leading the Agency to conclude that he had put his patients at risk of death. Id. Respondent also misled the tribunal in his first hearing and failed to adequately acknowledge the untruthful testimony in his second hearing. In this case, the Agency believes that denial of Respondent's application would encourage the general registrant community to exhibit candor when dealing with the Agency, conduct and document appropriate medical examinations, and monitor their patients carefully to ensure that the controlled substances that they prescribe do not harm their patients or fall into illegitimate channels where they can be abused or diverted.

In sum, Respondent has not offered any credible evidence on the record to rebut the Government's case for denial of his application and Respondent has not demonstrated that he can be entrusted with the responsibility of registration. Id. at 26–27. Accordingly, the Agency will order that Respondent's application be denied.
