

From these sources, we developed a list of pests with quarantine significance for the continental United States that occur in the Republic of Korea (on any host) and are associated with the three Acer spp. (anywhere in the world). We are therefore confident the pest risk assessment is thorough and accurate.

Based on the pest risk assessment, we prepared the RMD to identify phytosanitary measures that could be applied to the three Acer spp. to mitigate the risk of introducing these pests into the United States. As the commenters did not raise any specific concerns with the information presented in the RMD, we continue to consider the mitigations in the RMD to be sufficient to ensure that pests are not introduced into the United States through this pathway.

One of the commenters also stated that, while the PRA considers risks associated with known pests, it does not consider pest species that may present a risk in the future.

APHIS continuously monitors foreign countries for quarantine pests. If a new quarantine pest relevant to the importation of these species of Acer from the Republic of Korea arises in the future, APHIS will reassess the associated pest risk and may revise the import restrictions accordingly.

Therefore, in accordance with § 319.37–4(e), and based on the reasons outlined in the initial notice, the PRA accompanying the initial notice, and this second notice, we are removing A. buergerianum, A. palmatum, and A. pseudosieboldianum dormant, bare-rooted dwarf plants from the Republic of Korea from the NAPPRA lists, thereby allowing the importation of such Acer spp. into the continental United States, subject to the pest mitigation measures required for all approved dwarf plants imported under the APHIS Artificially Dwarfed Plants program⁴ as well as the additional commodity specific risk management measures described in the RMD accompanying the initial notice.⁵
