III. List of Community Disaster Resilience Zones

On September 6, 2023, FEMA announced the designation of an initial set of 483 community disaster resilience zones across the United States.⁹ To identify resilience zones, FEMA used components of the National Risk Index to identify the census tracts most at-risk and in-need. FEMA is currently working on additional designations and plans to announce them soon. These designations will help build resilience across the nation by driving Federal, public, and private resources to these designated zones.

FEMA also used the White House Council on Environmental Quality's Climate and Economic Justice Screening Tool, a geospatial platform that identifies areas across the nation that face especially acute climate and other resilience burdens, to help focus the designations on disadvantaged communities.¹⁰

A map of the census tracts that were designated as community disaster resilience zones on September 6, 2023, can be found at <https://www.fema.gov/partnerships/community-disaster-resilience-zones>.
